

PRESS RELEASE

All about the perimenopause

Are you in your mid to late 40s? Are your periods unpredictable? Are hot flushes affecting your days (and nights)? Is your mood swinging up and down? Are you experiencing other symptoms too, such as aches and pains, dry skin and poor sleep? If so, you may be going through the perimenopause.

In the Autumn 2017 issue of The Menopause Exchange newsletter, GP and menopause specialist Dr Jane Woyka talks about the impact of the perimenopause. She looks at hormonal changes at this time of life and the symptoms they may cause, as well as the role of tests and whether you need contraception.

“The perimenopause affects all women differently,” says Norma Goldman, founder and director of The Menopause Exchange. “It can last for up to five years before the menopause itself, which occurs, on average, at around the age of 51. Many of the perimenopausal symptoms can be mistaken for those of other health problems, and vice versa. Women should seek medical advice if they have any troublesome symptoms, as treatments are available.”

The Menopause Exchange, which was established in 1999, is completely independent and is not sponsored by any companies. It provides impartial, easily understood information to women and healthcare professionals. The Menopause Exchange quarterly newsletter contains articles written by top medical experts, such as gynaecologists, GPs, consultants, specialist menopause nurses, pharmacists, dietitians, complementary practitioners etc.

Other articles in the Autumn 2017 newsletter include exercise at the menopause, continuous combined HRT and digestive problems, as well as recent news and Ask the Experts Q&As.
